

The Dutch Language Division is looking for a Blog Editor!

As part of the DLD's services, we keep our members informed about all division activity, relevant ATA activity, relevant outside events, and matters of professional interest. The Blog Editor must be a division member and will become a member of the Division's Leadership Council once appointed.

Ideally, the Blog Editor should have:

- familiarity with the range of interests and concerns of the Dutch Language Division
- contacts and/or people skills for recruiting contributors
- the desire to write original materials
- good writing skills

The Blog Editor is eligible for an honorarium, when certain minimum requirements are met.

Click here to see the current DLD blog.

The required time commitment is flexible. Ideally, you would publish approximately 6 articles per year. These can be a combination of articles about relevant ATA conference sessions, a message from the Administrator, original articles or adaptations of previously published articles.

- The minimum time commitment is 2-4 hours every two months. Tasks include finding interesting topics for an article, reaching out to colleagues who may contribute to an interesting article, writing and/or adapting articles (topics can be very broad, ranging from the Dutch language, to translation, interpretation, technology, language-related research, literature, etc.).
- Of course, more is always welcome! If you are an avid blogger and writer, love sharing interesting tidbits about the language industry and the Dutch language, this is the place to 'leave your egg' (waar je je ei kwijt kunt).
- Are you a novice blogger or writer? Don't worry! Your colleagues are always available to proofread articles and give you guidance or feedback, if needed.

For more information, please contact Irene Stoel, DLD Administrator at atadutchld@gmail.com